

Lawn Games

Spike ball, cornhole and other outdoor activities that allow physical distancing are popular activities this fall.

Justice, Equity, Diversity and Inclusion Update

During the summer, the college formed a 16-member steering committee consisting of students, trustees, faculty and staff to lead a strategic visioning process focused on justice, equity, diversity and inclusion. Dr. Debora Johnson-Ross '81, chief operating officer of Black Eagle Associates, was hired as a senior consultant for this work. The committee will focus on five areas:

- History, memory and place.
- Curriculum, teaching and advising.
- Student life.
- Enrollment, recruitment and marketing.
- Policies, procedures and JEDI structure.

The committee's progress will be posted at wofford.edu/strategicvision.

Choosing Wofford

Wofford College didn't only make an appearance on the Wall Street Journal's ranking of nearly 800 colleges and universities, but a first-year student was also profiled to share how he made his college choice during the COVID-19 pandemic. Henry Michalak '24, an undecided major from Marietta, Georgia, was one of four students selected to discuss how he made his college choice. Wofford's size, academic-merit scholarships and regular communication from the college made an impression on Michalak. Read more in the Wall Street Journal (subscription required).

Unity Day

The Student-Athlete Advisory Committee made a Unity Day part of its social justice campaign. Earlier this week, coaches participated in a panel discussion and student-athletes received t-shirts stating, "One Love" and a logo designed by the SAAC board. The logo will serve as a uniform patch and helmet sticker for all of the college's athletics teams.
